Sumter, the Court House Town, is situated on one of our thoroughfares of travel and inland communication, and, already one of the principal towns in the State, bids fair, before many years, to outstrip most of its competitors. KING-STREET.—The pleasant weather for the past few days has induced many persons to frequent this fashionable promenade. The stores that line it on either side present so many attractions in their tastefully arranged windows, that the ladies are tempted by the display to take a peep at the interior, and price this love of a dress, or something else that is equally enchanting. It is easy to pass from a more shopper to a substantial buyer, and, indeed, the goods that are so temptingly exposed on the counters are such alluring baits that it is only a weak pocket that resists the pressure.

When the evening shades begin to fall new beauties are added to the scene, and from every store oially in THE DAILY NEWS lights gleam upon the slowly dispersing throng. King street is then in a blaze, and the many colored lamps in the drug stores throw a subdued mellow light upon the sidewalk that almost rivals the moonlight. Although our promenade is not as wide as could be desired, yet it is well paved, and with care all collisions may be avoided. It is decidedly the best we have, and the patronage bestowed upon it shows plainly the appreciation in
